

Environment and Climate Change Officer

- Australia's Largest Media Organisation
- Long Term Career Growth
- Surry Hills Location

This is an opportunity for an enthusiastic and proactive recent graduate of the climate and environmental sciences to be mentored and developed within our business.

News Limited is Australia's largest media organisation and has been highly proactive in its approach to addressing environmental issues, establishing the Environment and Climate Change Department in 1990, launching the "One Degree" initiative in 2007 and becoming a carbon neutral company in 2010.

Our environmental impact is extremely important to us and our considerable efforts to reduce this impact have received numerous accolades worldwide.

The Environment and Climate Change Department based out of Surry Hills, NSW is responsible for developing, implementing and continuously improving strategies to address environmental risk for the News Limited business nationwide.

As the Environment and Climate Change Officer, your role is wide ranging across all aspects of environment management including carbon & energy, waste & recycling, water, corporate environmental responsibility and risk management. You will coordinate our voluntary and regulatory reporting of energy use and greenhouse gas emissions including NGER & EEO compliance reporting.

Being an integral part of the Global Energy Initiative for the broader News Corporation business worldwide you will have some interaction and communication with our global offices.

We see this role as an opportunity for long term growth and development. We are looking for someone that we can mentor toward taking on this important role within the group, that can further represent the business to industry forums and that can look to develop initiatives of their own. With the support and mentorship of a highly experienced manager, this role has considerable learning potential.

We are looking for a highly proactive individual with a real passion for the industry and a drive to make a difference. The role is ideal as the first entry into a large corporate environment for someone with a strong academic foundation to build from.
