I don't want to sound like I'm gushing but I genuinely felt it was great preparation before landing a job at the ABC."
I also had the opportunity through the Global Environmental Journalism initiative to study foreign reporting in Helsinki and film a short documentary in Norway. The uni and independent centre for journalism within it are also very supportive of individual students and were very helpful and supportive during my Honours year when I wanted to pursue a story in the Pacific.
As well as a good theoretical grounding, the course offered great practical subjects taught by some very inspiring staff (including Four Corners' Mark Bannerman, Tony Maniaty, Wendy Bacon, Eurydice and Jenna Price). They all have great contacts and were very understanding about balancing journalism work (at the time for News Ltd) with study.
but the course I studied from 2007-2010 (which included an Honours year) was highly educational, inspiring and fantastic preparation for entering the industry.

		Howson	QUT UTS	ABC ABC	Manager, ACT, ABC Local Radio  Political Reporter Brisbane  Brisbane	Manager, ACT. recession of the early 90s, which saw the closure of the Herald Inged into the now ABC Local Radio Herald-Sun) and the ABC cutbacks of the mid 90s, many major media outlets were under terrible pressure. No-one was offering cadetships. We had to learn somewhere, and j-schools were it. A number of our teachers were "hard-bitten real journalists", who made us thump stories out on type-writers to strict deadlines, tore up inadequate stories in front of the class, etc Economic times got better, but most cadetships didn't reappear. So it's fine to criticise j-schools, but not from the assumption that the old ways are better option when they aren't an option any more. I reckon I learned a lot from student media – all my practical skills came from those outlets where you could practice to your heart's content, experiment, and make quite a few mistakes. Nothing teaches a deadline like actual publication, even if only to fellow student readers/listeners/viewers. I do recall feeling disillusioned with my degree for some years, because it clidn't immediately lead to a job as a journalist. But as I said, those were competitive times.  These days though i'm glad for the things I learned in class, Spelling, grammar and punctuation. The inverted triangle. Check, check and check again. And cross-check. Write it down, your memory isn't perfect. Your notebook is a legal document. A press release is not a story. This is what defamation is. Never say in a studio what you wouldn't want toroaclast. The news bulletin mill not wait for you to finish your last part. All ledivered in an environment untramished by influence from publication owners or advertisers. And all good messages I pass on when training new content makers now.  At RMIT we enjoyed both decent teaching and a full range of excellent student-run media on which to inflict our fleegling skills. On balance, I think we did okay."  Thumbs up"

The program was heavily oriented to practical newspaper reporting, law and ethics - and statistics was a company unit. It was run by two veteran newspapermen - Lyle Tucker of HWT and Les Hoffman, a former editor of the Straits Times and scrapee from Lee Kuan Yew."

	Lopez	urs	Radio Netherlands Worldwide, formerly Jakarta Globe		You don't necessarily need a journalism degree to become a good journalist. But studying at UTS was wonderful for contacts, opportunities and inspiration. This is a tough industry, and I will always be grateful for mentors like Wendy Bacon (UTS Journalism Program coordinator). Every UTS journalism graduate I've ever spoken to has a 'Wendy story'- of her helping yet another young journalist find their feet."
